

I am writing in response to the proposed changes to FCC regulations concerning Christian Radio stations. My children and I listen to KLOVE on the radio whenever we are in the car. The messages and music that we hear are always positive and constructive. I never have to worry that my children will hear inappropriate lyrics or language. I feel that we are all learning while listening to live better lives, help others, and contribute to our society. I cannot imagine not being able to listen to KLOVE radio in our local area.

The new proposals being considered by the FCC surely compromise the ability of KLOVE to broadcast a positive Christian message. KLOVE is completely listener supported financially and it is already hard enough to provide the needed financial support. Regulations increasing the staffing requirements would cause costs to increase significantly. In addition, Christian radio is intended to deliver the gospel and surely falls under the protection of the Constitution of the US for freedom of religion. Requiring non-Christians to monitor and oversee impinges on this freedom.
